City Journal contributor Linda Chavez has begun in earnest what she describes as "a long-term effort to reverse public school-based pornography." For her first book, Chavez has chosen a comparison of how she raised three sons -- all who, she believes, will be valuable citizens -- and how the schools have dealt with her efforts to teach morals and values. She is traveling the country with her sons in tow, to meet teachers, parents, students, and school administrators and to hear their stories. In this excerpt, Linda Chavez visits Salinas High School and speaks with Principal Joanne Schott, a longtime veteran of the school. Joanne is candid about the challenges of raising her sons, and her concerns about how the schools are dealing with them.

Q: jruby & local gem paths Is it possible to let jruby manage paths to gems installed on the fly? In my situation I have installed some gems in a directory local to my jruby. (For example, myapp/gems) I then reference them from my jruby lib/paths.rb like this: `Dir.glob("#{File.expand_path('../gems/' + gem_name)}/#{gem_name}*")` and they work fine. However, I would like jruby to do it for me, based on my current loading of myapp/gems/my_gem. Right now jruby loads myapp/gems/my_gem but inside that I have my_gem/lib. So when I reference my_gem from jruby I am accessing
